

THE NEW SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL RESEARCH

A school designed for mature men and women with its courses arranged for their leisure hours.

Its intellectual spirit is that of scientific inquiry, of impartial exposition rather than attack or defense. It aims to make scholarship serve practical affairs.

It offers opportunities to persons interested in the various social problems to meet one another, to compare views and to clarify them through discussion under competent and expert direction.

The New School was founded in 1919. Fifteen hundred and thirty seven students enrolled for its courses last year.

The school offers twenty-two courses for the fall term, beginning on October 5. Among them are—

LEWIS MUMFORD—ARCHITECTURE
IN AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

HORACE M. KALLEN—RELIGION
AND ITS PHILOSOPHIES

STARK YOUNG—THE THEATRICAL
SEASON, 1925-26

MORRIS R. COHEN—PROBLEMS OF CONTEMPORARY PHILOSOPHY

H. W. L. DANA—CONTEMPORARY
LITERATURE, 1900-1925

THE HOUSE THAT LOVE BUILT. An Italian Renaissance Temple to Arts and Letters.

By W. Franklyn Paris.

The Haddon Press

$3.75 9½ x 6¼; 91 pp.

New York

A detailed exposition of the architectural make-up of the Detroit Public Library with incidental remarks on the applicability of Italian Renaissance art to modern public buildings. There are fifty-five illustrations. The book is beautifully printed and stoutly bound.

THE SCIENCES

CHIMPANZEE INTELLIGENCE AND ITS VOCAL EXPRESSION.

By Robert M. Yerkes and Blanche W. Learned.

The Williams & Wilkins Company

$3.50 7¾ x 5; 157 pp.

Baltimore

Dr. Yerkes' part of this book adds little to what was already known about the mental habits of the anthropoids, but Miss Learned's exhaustive report upon the sounds they make is full of novelty. It is illustrated with more than 300 musical illustrations.

LEFTHANDEDNESS: A New Interpretation.

By Beaufort Sims Parson.

The Macmillan Company

$2 7¼ x 4¾; 185 pp.

New York

An effort to solve an ancient and very difficult physiological problem. Mr. Parson finds the cause of lefthandedness in what may be called lefteyedness—the exclusive use of the left visual line for sighting. The theory is ingeniously maintained. There is an exhaustive bibliography.

THE SCIENCE OF BIOLOGY. An Introductory Study.

By George G. Scott.

The Thomas Y. Crowell Company

$3.50 8½ x 5½; 617 pp.

New York

A workmanlike, but somewhat dull book, apparently intended for college use. It is in four parts. The first deals with the cell, the second with plants, the third with animals, and the fourth with general anatomy, physiology, histology and embryology. There are also chapters on heredity, on evolution, and on the special biology of man. The author, who is an associate professor of biology in the College of the City of New York, strongly supports the evolutionary hypothesis. There are many good illustrations.

TRANSLATIONS

THREE PLAYS OF PLAUTUS.

Translated by F. A. Wright and H. Lionel Rogers.

E. P. Dutton & Company

$3 7½ x 5; 330 pp.

New York

The plays here translated are: "The Slip-Knot" (Rudens), "The Crock of Gold" (Aulularia), "The

THE MAN MENCKEN

A biographical and critical survey copiously illustrated and documented

by

ISAAC GOLDBERG

HERE is the quintessence of Menckanism. The biographer has caught the tempo, the paradox, the surge, and the charm of the essential Mencken. He organizes him, challenges him, orchestrates him.

Mencken's views of the cosmos, his preferences in haberdashery, beer, and symphonies, his adventures as a Sunday School pupil, a boy photographer, and a cigar salesman, his meteoric rise as a newspaperman—editor-in-chief of The Baltimore Herald at twenty-five—his evolution as critic and author—all are recorded in a searching and spirited chronicle.

A Special Note for Readers of The American Mercury and Collectors of Menckeniana:

This biography is illustrated with a wealth of documentary material, most of it never before published. Early poems, paintings, musical compositions—the youthful Mencken made an arrangement of William Watson's "April, April"—chemical experiments, and fugitive writings which have eluded even the most intrepid first-edition collectors are included. The book also contains a number of belligerent, hilarious, tempestuous, typically Menckenesque letters.

Publication date of THE MAN MENCKEN is October 15th. We suggest that you telephone or write your bookseller at once, reserving a copy of the first edition. It will be a volume of about 375 pages, 5½ x 8½, printed on a specially made rag stock, illustrated in aquatone prints, bound in full cloth, stamped in genuine gold and gilt top. Price: $4.00.
