

THE AMERICAN MERCURY AUTHORS

GRACE ADAMS, PH.D. (Cornell), is the author of "Psychology: Science or Superstition?" She is now writing a book on child psychology.

HELEN BIERCE is the daughter of the late Ambrose Bierce.

BOB BROWN's latest book, "Let There Be Beer!" was published last year.

JAMES T. FARRELL's latest book is "The Young Manhood of Studs Lonigan." He is also the author of "Young Lonigan" and "Gas-House McGinty."

HENRY HAZLITT will become editor of THE AMERICAN MERCURY with the January, 1934, issue. He was formerly one of the editors of the Nation. He is the author of "The Anatomy of Criticism."

EUGENE JOFFE was born in New Jersey in 1912 and was graduated from Columbia University. He has appeared in the New Yorker, the New Republic, and Contact.

CARTER BROOKE JONES has been a reporter for the Atlanta Georgian for the past four years.

IDWAL JONES was formerly on the staff of the New York American. He is the author of a novel, "Steel Chips."

EDGAR LEE MASTERS' latest book of poems is "The Serpent in the Wilderness." He is also the author of a dozen more books, including the celebrated "Spoon River Anthology."

OSCAR OSTLUND was born in Iowa and went to Luther College at Decorah in that State. While he was there a musical professor initiated him into the mysteries of the baritone horn, and on his enlistment in the Iowa militia, in 1916, he was put into the regimental band. When the United States entered the World War he transferred into the Navy and took his horn along. He served three years on a battleship. Since the war he has done some newspaper work and of late has taken to the radio.

EDWARD ROBINSON teaches piano in New York. He has an M.A. from Columbia, and has done some composing.

WILLIAM SEAGLE is the author of "There Ought to Be a Law" and the co-author, with Morris L. Ernst, of "To the Pure." He formerly practiced law in New York.

GEORGE SEIBEL is dramatic and literary editor of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. He is the author of several books, including "The Mormon Saints," "Bacon vs. Shakespeare," and "Hauptmann and Sudermann."

CHARLES FITZHUGH TALMAN has been a staff meteorologist for the United States Weather Bureau since 1896. He is the author of "Our Weather" and "The Realm of the Air."

LOU WYLIE has worked on newspapers in New Orleans and Brooklyn. She is now living in Brooklyn.

DANE YORKE was formerly in business in New York.
