

SCRIBNER & WELFORD'S NEW BOOKS.

A CHRONICLE HISTORY OF THE LIFE AND WORK OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,

PLAYER, POET, AND PLAYMAKER. By FREDERICK GARD FLEAY, author of the "Shakespeare Manual." With two etched illustrations. Fine paper, medium 8vo, half leather, gilt top, $4.50.

The theatrical side of the career of Shakespeare has never yet received any adequate consideration, his connection with the theaters and acting companies in his earlier years not having been traced or even investigated. His relations with other dramatists, especially with Jonson, have also been grossly misrepresented. While every idle story of mythical gossip has been carefully collected, and the pettiest details of his commercial dealings have been garnered, little attention has hitherto been given to his dealings with the plays by other men with whom he was fellow-worker, and a large group of evidences bearing on the chronology of his work, derived from the early production of English plays in Germany, has been cast aside as valueless. In this work an attempt is made to collect this neglected material, to throw new light on the Sonnets, and to determine the dates of the production of all his works. A complete list of all plays published with due authority anterior to 1640 by any dramatic writer is given from the Stationers' Registers. Many unfounded hypotheses of Collier, Halliwell, and others are for the first time exploded, and the work of ten years' investigation is condensed in a single volume. In many instances one paragraph represents months of labor, and it is hoped that a permanent addition of value is thus made to Shakespearian literature. The arrangement of the book is made so as to appeal not merely to the specialist, but to every one who feels an interest in the greatest writer of any literature, and the crowning glory of our own.
