HEALTH IN GLASS:

A LIFT TO LIVING

Weeds—$75 an armful! Aconitum napellus, the monkshood weed, brings $1.50 to $2.00 a pound. Valuable in the treatment of neuralgic pains, and for reducing fever in diseases like acute tonsillitis, bronchitis, laryngitis, aconite is only one of the weeds used in medicines. Hundreds more, as well as a great number of non-botanical drugs, help guard your health.

"Hey, Mom—don't forget our vitamins!" Dickie's so enthusiastic about taking his vitamin tablets. If I'd let him, Dickie would carry his vitamins around with him—eat them like candy," says Dorothy Kilgallen, famous Broadway columnist, noted among friends for her modern ideas in home decorating. "Vitamins that come in glass are so handy to use—you can just put them in your purse, carry them wherever you're going and be sure of taking them on schedule!"

"When Dickie takes a shower, our bathroom's steamy as a Turkish bath!" Dorothy Kilgallen says. "That's one reason why it's nice to have the things in our medicine cabinet in glass. Dry medicines should be kept dry—to stay at full potency. Glass bottles are moisture-proof."

You can SEE what you're taking when medicines are in glass. That's comforting, to say the least! What's more, when products are packed in glass, you can quickly see when you need to buy more. And Duraglas bottles are especially designed for easy opening, accurate pouring, air-tight resealing.

Sand, soda ash, lime—that's all glass is. When we see how lovely glass containers look, we're apt to forget that they are made of some of nature's most abundant materials. This fact, plus the speed of modern glass-making machines, make possible glass containers at low cost.
