trude into his lonely cosmos or to break his communion with elemental nature.

At Nierendorf's Gallery, also in New York, one may compare Hartley with another lyric master of sky and sea, the creator of a world in which there are many mansions but also few people. This world belongs to Lyonel Feininger, an artist born in New York, who was fated to become the "German cubist" par excellence. Taken to Germany at the age of sixteen, Feininger came under the influence of the French school. In the immediate post-war period, he translated the discoveries of Picasso and Braque into his own peculiar idiom and became one of the leading German expressionists. His later painting shows the strong impress of Paul Klee. With a few scratches on paper, he can conjure enormous vistas of sea and sail. Always his work has the soaring architectonic quality of our New York skyline; the edges of his intersecting planes are as sharply defined as if cut in jade and lapis-lazuli and yet as transparent as glass. An artist of single integrity, he uses pigment cleanly to register the most subtle color transitions. Next fall Feininger is coming to the United States to settle. It will be absorbing to watch the effect of our clear sky and straight buildings on his work, which even in Germany has preserved the geometric precision of our industrial cities.

JACK LONDON A Daily Worker Offer

- Jack London was America's first modern revolutionary writer who, with his passion for truth and social justice, combined a rare, magnificent genius for telling a swift moving story.
- With flaming anger and burning words, London laid bare the devastating effect upon workers of slum life and sweatshops, of manhood wrecked on hell-ships under cruel captains. In "Call of the Wild," in "Smoke Bellew," in "White Fang," he wrote glowingly, dramatically of primitive battles of man and dog in the ice-locked North during the famous Klondike gold rush.
- In "The Iron Heel," one of the classics of revolutionary literature, he envisaged the terror that would come with fascism. In "Martin Eden" he shattered illusions of capitalist "culture." Hailed by millions as a literary titan, the very strength and power of his works soon caused publishers to let the most "dangerous" ones lapse—that is, go out of print. Now, in the "Daily Worker" offer, you have the chance to get his 10 best works practically as a gift. Send in the coupon today.

How To Get Them

1. Clip, fill out and mail TODAY your reservation coupon which appears below. Immediately on receipt, we will set aside for you the complete ten-volume Jack London Library.
2. Clip out and save the London Library numbered coupons appearing on page 1 of each day's "Daily Worker" until you have 14 differently numbered coupons of which at least 7 must be consecutively numbered.

3. Bring these coupons to the business office of the "Daily Worker," 35 East 12th Street (8th floor), New York City, together with only 87 cents and you'll immediately receive the first group of two books of the Jack London Library. Then, every 14 days, two more books will be ready for you until you own the whole ten-volume library. If you want the group of 2 books mailed to you, include 13 cents in addition to the 87 cents to cover postage and packing.

Working-Class Genius

Jack London's rich prose glows and burns with light and color and power. You, as millions before you, will laugh and cry, be stirred and thrilled to the bottom of your heart by the strength, the romance, the adventures which he packs into his extraordinary novels. There is "The Call of the Wild," the story of Buck, a magnificent dog of the Klondike. He had been suddenly jerked from civilization and flung into the heart of the primordial, where there was no rest nor peace nor safety for man or dog in a land where rule was by fang and club. The drama of a man betting his all on a show of strength by Buck forms one of the richest heritages of literature. "Smoke Bellew," another masterpiece, tells the story of strong men and loyal women in the Klondike. The description of the dog team race through the frozen wilds to Dawson which brings out the courage and brutality that is in each man will leave you breathless with excitement. It is stories such as these that won London the title "King of Story Tellers."
