

A larger number of physicians would also help to solve the patients' problem of obtaining medical aid more readily during the night.

If all medical research were halted for five years, future generations would certainly suffer. New medical advances would be delayed. But if those billions of dollars that would be saved were applied to improving the standard of medical care, if more medical schools were established so that we could have the much needed increase in good physicians, if physicians became more alert in recognizing curable disease that is crippling or fatal when overlooked, and if the funds become available to administer important but costly methods of diagnosis and treatment, it is not unlikely that more lives would be saved and more physical and mental help would be rendered to our population than would be lost by the five years of neglected research.

It is not the purpose of this discussion to deprecate the importance of medical research. Research must be prosecuted vigorously and continuously. Future gains in the health of our society depend largely upon research. The point to emphasize here is that there are other neglected factors from which we may yet gain much to improve the health of our people. Insufficient emphasis is being placed on improving medical education; insufficient funds are available for teachers who may be doing no research; insufficient salaries are paid to good teachers who do no laboratory investigation; inadequate measures are taken to enable physicians, especially general practitioners, to obtain postgraduate medical instruction.

A physician spends four years as an undergraduate at a medical school and generally obtains good early instruction. Much of this education has been subsidized by private philanthropy or public funds. However, the physician spends forty years as a postgraduate practitioner and often obtains no further instruction. Many do take postgraduate courses, read the current medical journals, and attend medical meetings. Much more needs to be done to see to it that physicians not only keep in touch with advances in medicine but are re-taught what they have forgotten, so that fewer and fewer medical errors are made and more and more lives and health are preserved.

The theoretical possibility of stopping all medical research for five years (heaven forbid!) was discussed merely to indicate the great need for teaching more effectively what is already known and to emphasize the importance of these other factors that could help greatly in the prevention and cure of disease.

LETTERS TO THE SCIENCE EDITOR

THE VICOS EXPERIMENT

HAVING JUST FINISHED reading the enthralling section on the Vicos experiment and its far-reaching effects upon the surrounding areas, I am driven to report to you my sense of enthusiasm. Would that this section might be required reading for all administrators of lend-lease!

Thank you for this exciting report and for acquainting us with this encouraging example of the sort of sensitive imagination and intelligent execution which seems so rare these days.

FRANCES B. HITCHCOCK.

Manset, Maine.

THE ARTICLES IN SR's November 3 edition on the Cornell Vicos project in Peru are to be commended. However, with respect to the climax of this great and successful experiment, namely, the purchase of the land by the Indian community, it is rather surprising that no credit whatsoever is given to one individual and to one agency without whose help this purchase would have been impossible, at least at the price and the time agreed to.

The individual is Senator-elect Edward Kennedy who, after visiting the Vicos project, on his own initiative brought the matter forcefully and intelligently to the personal attention of President Manuel Prado. The agency is the United States Embassy in Peru which persistently pressed the issue with the Peruvian government and eventually, with the help of the then prime minister, Pedro Beltrán, achieved the happy result.

Since both the individual and the agency (the Department of State) have so often and so recently been the subject of raised eyebrows in intellectual circles, it seems worth pointing out that, in this specific case, they acted wisely and effectively. My good friend, Dr. Henry Dobyns, then in charge of the Vicos project, would certainly be the first to admit the oversight and give credit where credit is due.

One further comment: I wish I could share the optimism of your authors with respect to the immediate impact of the project and its widespread acceptance by the Peruvian powers-that-be.

JAMES LOEB, JR.,

Former U.S. Ambassador to Peru.

Washington, D.C.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The individual who really deserves credit for a contribution to the Vicos project is former Ambassador Loeb himself. Before his arrival at the United States Embassy in Lima, the State Department had offered no help whatever to Cornell anthropologist Allan R. Holmberg, intellectual spark plug of the Vicos transformation. Soon after Mr. Loeb became Ambassador to Peru, he visited Vicos—the first U.S. Ambassador to do so. His Counselor of Embassy, Douglas Henderson (now U.S. charge d'affaires in Lima) shared Ambassador Loeb's active interest in the fate of the hacienda and its Indian inhabitants. U.S. Senator-elect Edward Kennedy, of Massachusetts, did visit Vicos later. He did talk to the then Peruvian President Manuel Prado subsequently. But Prado already had been thoroughly briefed on Vicos by his old friend and Indian affairs advisor, Dr. Carlos Monge M. President Prado probably was less influenced by what Mr. Kennedy said to him than by what Mr. Prado was about to do—visit Mr. Kennedy's brother, U.S. President John F. Kennedy, in Washington to seek economic aid for Peru.

Movies

depths to explore. Yet the film is carefully made, directed by Robert Wise with the highest of technical competence, and it has sensibly been fleshed out with some minor characters and a few extra settings. And now that I have expressed my dissatisfaction that the movie was not something better or more, and confessed that I sat through it relatively unmoved, I will reveal that I sat next to a young woman who, by the end, was all quivering tears. "Did you see the play?" I asked her. "No," she said, happily wiping her streaming eyes. And maybe that's the answer.

An attempt has been made, too, to make Sartre's "No Exit" cinematic, with the help of an acting brigade from the Actor's Studio, which, while on a South American tour, acted out the piece before the cameras in Argentina. The results, directed by Tad Danielewski, were reassembled in New York by film editor Carl Lerner, and Vladimir Ussachevsky was called upon to provide an eerie electronic score. The acting by Viveca Lindfors, Rita Gam, Morgan Sterne, and Ben Piazza turns out to be slightly stagey, but effective; Mr. Danielewski's directorial notions are, at times, striking; and the music is strange and unsettling, but here is one more case for those who are convinced that plays simply can't make satisfactory movies. The actors, the director, and in the free press corner: his record is clear and unmistakable. Nationwide's contract with ABC also speaks for itself. Some observers have expressed pleased surprise at Jim Hagerty's role in the drama. They tend to think of him as spokesman for a Republican White House for eight years. Journalists who knew him as such are unequivocal in their respect for the way he handled that job. One said: "He never lost his newspaper values in the White House." Mr. Hagerty's father was a political writer for the New York Times for a generation. The son also was a Times reporter before he became press secretary to New York's Governor Dewey and then President Eisenhower. Mr. Hagerty said that since he left Washington, his prime commitment has been to responsible, impartial reporting without favoring Republican or Democrat. His demeanor at the Howard K. Smith political interment of Richard M. Nixon bears this out.

Indeed, if there were still any doubts about his commitment, they were drathe composer all seem involved in a fight for dominance, and no one wins. To be sure, Mr. Sartre's existentialist hell does seem rather dated and superficial.

Flotsam from the New Wave has reached our shores, none of it very stimulating. A contemporary version of "Candide" wastes the talents of Jean-Pierre Cassel, Pierre Brasseur, and Nadia Gray, and it is tasteless enough to lump together under the same satiric bushel the German war horrors and atrocities with French chicanery and the American racial problem. The equation is simply not there, no matter how one stretches it, and the unstirred mixture of fantasy and realism never for a moment jells. In "Paris Belongs to Us," a youthful former film critic, Jacques Rivette, attempts to combine his personal anguish with the universal (so he says), and succeeds in expressing only ineptitude, pretension, and what must be a truly monstrous ego. More artful is "Sundays and Cybele," so artful, in fact, that its young director, Serge Bourguignon, almost succeeds for 110 minutes in obscuring a story that could have been told simply and clearly in a half-hour. A war victim of amnesia creates a fantasy world (and a very dull one) with a twelve-year-old girl, is eventually shot dead for fear he will harm the child. Turns out he would have. The unpleasant little tale is made more so by consciously arty and difficult camera work that comes out only tricky and empty. —HOLLIS ALPERT.

matically dispelled a week after the Nixon show when Mr. Hagerty himself appeared on Howard K. Smith's program in a six-minute defense. "Let's get one thing straight," he said, "I'm against Hiss and everything he stands for. I have no use for him, never had, and never will have. But that doesn't alter the fact that he did play an important part in the political career of Richard Nixon."

Mr. Hagerty said the important issue in the controversy was not Mr. Nixon or Mr. Hiss, but "the basic American principle of freedom of the press, of exchange of ideas, free speech, free assent and dissent." He went on to explain the reasoning behind the appearance of Mr. Hiss on the program: "Perfectly aware of the background of Hiss, we sought neither to glorify him nor give him a forum to debate. Representing a chapter in Mr. Nixon's history, it seemed natural to put him on the program in historical context."

When the storm blows over, a sponsor, a commentator, and a network news director will have made an important contribution to our tradition of a free press. —ROBERT LEWIS SHAYON.

DIRECTIONS

To solve this puzzle you must guess twenty-odd WORDS, the definitions of which are given in the column headed DEFINITIONS. Alongside each definition, there is a row of dashes—one for each letter in the required word. When you have guessed a word, write it on the dashes, and also write each letter in the corresponding numbered square of the puzzle diagram. . . . When the squares are all filled in, you will find that you have completed a quotation from some published work. If read up and down, the letters in the diagram have no meaning. . . . Black squares indicate ends of words; if there is no black square at the right side of the diagram, the word carries over to the next line. . . . When all the WORDS are filled in, their initial letters spell the name of the author and the title of the piece from which the quotation has been taken. Of great help to the solver are this acrostic feature and the relative shapes of words in the diagram as they develop. Authority for spellings and definitions is Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition.
